crush (n.)

1. A decisive or critical moment or situation.
2. A usually temporary infatuation.
3. One who is the object of such an infatuation.

red·line crush (n.)

1. Under emotional stress (such as when playing a blank tile), a magical person spontaneously bursts with power possibly causing damage to themselves, their social status, relationships, the people they care about, and/or innocent bystanders and property.

In the City, Tuxedo Rose is a mysterious masked man that seems to be a magnet for trouble. No one is sure if Tux is a fellow fighter of evil, a casual spectator, a criminal mastermind, or an impartial judge. The players are the magical girls that (publically or privately) all have some kind of crush on Tuxedo Rose. But that infatuation can vary from blinded by love all the way to spurned and bitter rival.

Winter has come to the City; overcast skies, erratic gusts of icy cold wind, there's a light dusting of snow, and wind whipped snow snakes drift across the streets. Evil has drifted in with the cold. A trio walks into the City, seemingly oblivious to the cold.

Out of the mists walk Jack Frost and his Ice Fiends.

*Mirror Mirror on the wall,
who's the coldest of them all?
With childish glee he deals cards that are full of hate and icy shards.*

Beside him is Prince and his gang/wolf pack.

*Mirror Mirror on the wall,
who's the wildest of them all?
Bright white teeth and slicked back hair,
he only acts like he doesn't care.*

Finally, Snow Wight and her vicious zombie dwarves.

*Mirror Mirror on the wall,
who's the fairest of them all?
Ruby lips and snow blind eyes,
beware her tricks and the zombie knives.*

Following the logic of magical girl anime, these villains will (of course) start their campaign of evil but infiltrating the school that our player's attend.

Redline Crush is a little different from other TTWR play sets. Some of the characters have fixed genders and others are intended to be flexible. Teri, Kelsi, and Vickie are straight up magical girls. Jerry/Jeri can be a boy or girl and might cross change gender when transformed. Tuxedo Rose always appears as a young man, but may be secretly another school girl. Have fun with that! Some of the best anime (and Shakespeare) stories out there revolve around strange love triangles and confused genders.
